BEHIND THE SCENES IN WASHINGTON

By Rodney Dutocher

WASHINGTON.—The astonishing thing about the many millions which the "power trust" spends to hire Wall Street lawyers and lobbyists is not so much the size of the sum or the fact that stockholders and consumers have to be going down the equivalent of a rat hole. At any rate, that's what the record suggests to date.

Bush Boomed for the Governorship by Texarkanians

Want El Dorado-Texarkana Road Concreted—Free Toll Bridges

USH NOT PRESENT

Political Event Is Annual Miller County Rally and Barbecue

Little Rock.—(AP)—A move to draft Judge Dexter Bush of Miller county into the governor's race in Arkansas in 1936 became apparent today night at the annual Miller county rally, and barbecue, held a short distance from the city on the Broadway of America, on the property of Jack Miller.

The candidacy of Judge Bush was put forward by Will Steel, veteran attorney of Miller county, and other citizens and voters, although Judge Bush was not present to reply to the suggestions that he should make the race for the state's chief executive office.

It has been generally known for some time that a move was on foot to "draft" Bush for the gubernatorial race in 1936 in order to "pull southwest Arkansas out of the mud."

"Bush for Governor" "If we got behind him and back him up, Bush can make Arkansas as great a governor as the state has ever known," declared Steel. "Let us get behind Bush and let him know that southwest Arkansas is behind him."

Steel charged that Governor Futrell has "paid no attention" to southwest Arkansas, especially in the matter of roads.

"Southwest Arkansas has never obtained the benefits it was entitled to receive," charged Steel. "We have practically no roads. We should have a concrete road from here to El Dorado. We need a man who will recognize southwest Arkansas."

A large crowd of local and visiting county officials attended the meeting. Tell Bridge is issue.

Other speakers endorsing Bush for governor included Bert Larey, Clifford Cook and James Cook. Circuit Clerk C. M. Blocker acted as chairman of the rally. Blocker extended thanks to Miller and others who made the barbecue and rally possible.

In line with the "Bush for governor" campaign, Clifford Cook attacked the toll bridges over Red river. "When you send Bush to Little Rock with the right following the toll bridges will be no more," he declared.

From French Shrine

LISIEUX, France.—(AP)—Devotees of the "Little Flower" are now brought in radiophone pilgrimage to her shrine. Broadcasts from Saint Therese's station take place the first Thursday of each month and consist of a talk by some prelate and an artistic program, the aim being to make the saint better known, to encourage prayer and to invite pilgrims to her shrine.

FLAPPER FANNY SAYS:

Live put the first leaf in the book of women's fashions.

The result is that New Deal lawyers will be able to present the act to the court in the best possible light, through their chosen suit against the Electric Bond & Share Co., which is charged with violation through failure to register with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Decision on this case—and the act—is expected next winter.

Utility Lawyers Routed Other notable instances wherein high-priced utility lawyers have come to grief have been in the TVA test, where the supreme court held for the government, and in the Greenwood County case, where the circuit court of appeals flattened out Newton D. Baker's contention on behalf of the Duke Power Company that PWA loans and grants to municipalities for public power plants were unconstitutional.

Heavy stockholders in the Alabama Power Company who agreed to chip in at so much a share to pay Lawyer Forney Johnston of Birmingham for arguing the case against TVA are said to be balking since they learned that Johnston was charging $50,000 for the Edison Electric Institute.

The Duke Power Company's suit is one of many and because it asked for a 30-day stay of the appellate court's decree, the PWA loan-grant power plant issue probably won't be decided by the supreme court before next year.

New Deal lawyers assert that the delay is due to a desire by power companies to stave off final decision as long as possible, meanwhile tying up work on such projects, which are designed to relieve unemployment.

Credit Due Jerome Frank If the supreme court upholds the circuit court of appeals on the Greenwood county case, the result will be a final triumph for Jerome Frank, a lawyer who probably has had a finger in more New Deal legislation than any other brain trust.

Frank lost his job as general counsel for AAA because he fought too persistently for the interests of farmers, consumers, and share-croppers as against conservative, special privilege-seeking forces.

Transferred to RFC, he became unpopular with Chairman Jesse Jones by his belligerent championship of taxpayers and bondholders against such interests as the Van Sweringen, Kuhn-Loeb, and Morgans.

Frank finally decided to return to private practice, but Secretary Ickes retained him as special counsel in PWA power cases. The Greenwood county case had been badly botched by PWA, lost in federal court, and appealed to the circuit of appeals.

Frank snatched the case back from the higher court, reargued it on new grounds, and won a brilliant victory.

Follows Czar's Policy That is why Stalin is so determined not to let Japan encroach further into Outer Mongolia. Here he is merely following out old Czarist Russian policies. When the Chinese monarchy fell in 1911, Czarist Russia helped Outer Mongolia to split off from the weakened China.

When the Czar fell in Russia, China tried to get the territory back, but Soviet troops were rushed in and drove out the motley army of refugees, farmers and Chinese who had tried to recapture it.

Japan insists that Manchukuo is an entirely legitimate and independent state. In the same way, Russia agreed, in 1924, that Outer Mongolia belonged to China.

But despite both these assertions, Manchukuo does what Tokyo says, and Outer Mongolia does what Moscow says. Legion Gives $25 to Centennial Elms

Tree-Planting Fund Now at $135—Total of $300 Is Required

Subscription of $25 to the Centennial Elm Tree program by the Hempstead county post of the American Legion was announced Saturday by J. K. Sale, making the total thus far subscribed $135—against a required total of $300.

Fourteen civic organizations are being solicited for group contributions to avoid having to make a person-to-person canvass, and it is the hope of the committee, Mr. Sale, Fred Gray and Sid Bundy, to complete the $300 fund shortly.

Hope Star opened the fund with a $50 donation which was matched by the city of Hope; and on this first $100 the committee was able to buy 235 American elm trees and get them planted about a mile and a half out of Hope on either side of town, on the right-of-way of No. 67—the Broadway of America.

Jap and Russian Aims Collide in Outer Mongolia

Mongolia Independent, But Its Foreign Relations Agent Is Russia

MANCHUKUO IS JAP War Between These Subordinates Will Involve Their Principals

By NEA Service. Both seeking to extend their domination further into China, Russia and Japan have collided head-on at the border between Outer Mongolia and Manchukuo.

Here thousands of Mongol and Manchukuo troops with rifles, machine guns, tanks, artillery and airplanes have clashed in bloody conflict. Here, each side is rushing reinforcements to the men already fighting, making the conflict more seriously hourly.

Here efforts to define the boundaries and stop the hundreds of "border incidents" have thus far failed. Here Dictator Stalin of Russia has said to Japan, "No farther, or you fight us!"

Here a vast territory of high plateaus and endless flat steppes, which has been a battleground since the days of Genghis Khan 700 years ago, bids fair to be the "battleground of tomorrow."

Two vital, expanding nations have chosen prostrate China as a field in which to extend their influence. Japan has whittled away at North China, partly by actual military conquest, partly by fomenting rebellion against Chinese authority and setting up "puppet states."

Russia has "bored from within" through agents who set up Soviet states that still war against Chinese nationalism in the south, and by backing with its military might the Mongolian People's Republic, the independent Communist state which seceded from North China.

Backed By Moscow Outer Mongolia is independent so far as local government is concerned, but deals with the outside world through Moscow, which has also guaranteed it unlimited military backing.

Manchukuo, though it is nominally ruled by Pu Yi, legitimate heir of the old Manchukuo dynasty, its former rulers, has little independence of Japan even in local matters. But for purposes of international conflict of interests, Outer Mongolia is Soviet Russia, and Manchukuo is Japan.

Thus, both Japan and Russia have cut slices of Chinese cake right up to the point where their knives now clash.

Naturally, Stalin is glad to see the spread of his system of government into adjoining territory. But that is not the only reason he offers to defend with all the Soviet might the half billion semimodern people of Outer Mongolia.

This territory happens to adjoin Siberia right at the point where the vital Trans-Siberian railroad comes closest to Siberia's southern border. If Japan should move even farther west and north than she has, taking over the Outer Mongolian steppes, she would be too close for comfort. She would be in position to move northward quickly and cut the railroad, which is still the artery which keeps alive all of Russia-on-the-Pacific.

Thus lacking its blood-stream, all eastern Siberia might be so weakened as to lie at Japan's mercy in case of war.

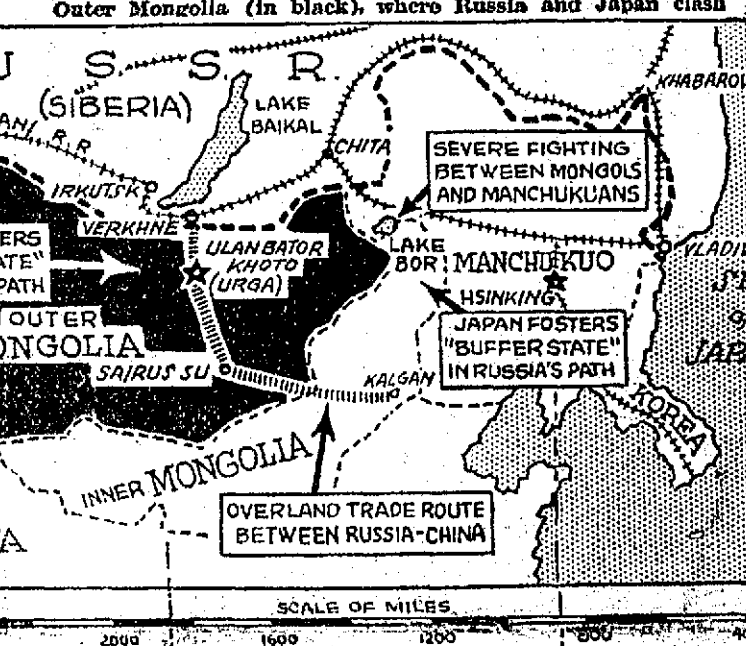

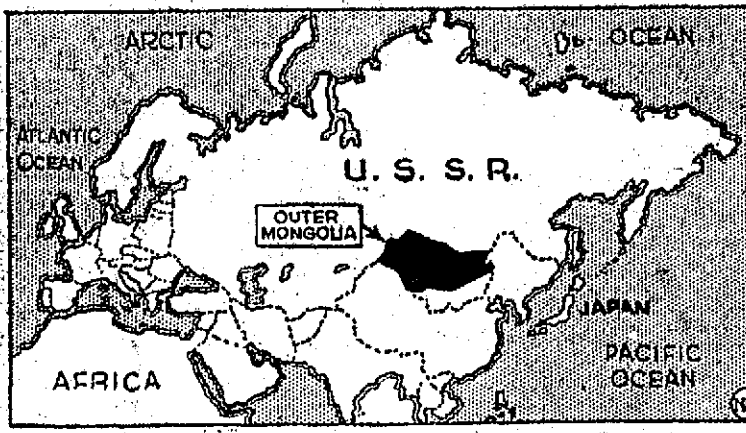

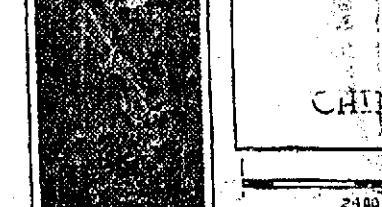

Follows Czar's Policy That is why Stalin is so determined not to let Japan encroach further into Outer Mongolia. Here he is merely following out old Czarist Russian policies. When the Chinese monarchy fell in 1911, Czarist Russia helped Outer Mongolia to split off from the weakened China.

The additional $165 now being solicited will go to cover the cost of fertilizing and attending to the young trees which were planted one week ago.

Vera Stretz Goes Free of Murder

Jury Exonerates her in Slaying of Dr. Fritz Gebhardt

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Vera Stretz was acquitted by a jury Friday night of the slaying of Dr. Fritz Gebhardt. Miss Stretz fainted at the counsel table.

Freedom for the blonde admitted slayer of her former suitor came after three hours of actual deliberation by a selected "blue ribbon" jury of professional and business men.

The state charged she killed Gebhardt after he refused to leave his wife and two children to marry her. Her attorney, Samuel S. Leibowitz, contended she shot and killed him justifiably after he lured her to his room and attacked him.

Foreman Curtis Lee announced the verdict in a loud voice. "Not guilty," he said. A college graduate who met Gebhardt on a cruise and then went to work as a $10 a week file clerk in his trade promotion firm on Fifth avenue, Miss Stretz admitted she conducted a liaison with him throughout the summer of 1935 but then sought to break it off when he told her he could not marry her.

The five raiding planes flew over the capital itself for 45 minutes, precipitating its evacuation by the populace, but dropped no bombs immediately.

LONDON, Eng.—(AP)—British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden rejected Saturday a formal French request for a meeting of the remaining Locarno signatories at Brussels April 8, pointing out that a session of the League of Nations committee of thirteen had already been called. ### Shylock Resented by Jewish Citizens

NEW YORK.—(AP)—The New York Sun says that Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice" quietly has been withdrawn from the list of texts available to New York city's school children. Dr. Harold G. Campbell, superintendent of schools, said that study of the classic is not barred but the play is not listed.

Associated Superintendent William E. Grady said that the question of withdrawing the book was promulgated several years ago by Jewish groups which protested that the character "Shylock" created an impression unfavorable to their race when studied by school children.

The Truth About Diet

By DR. MORRIS FISHER
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

Once people thought it was unsafe to eat oysters in a month without an "R." Nowadays we know that when oysters are shipped, they are just as safe in one season of the year as in another.

The oyster is a valuable food, because it is especially rich in certain vitamins, in iodine, and in nutritious protein.

Other shellfish in wide use are clams, mussels, scallops, lobsters, crabs, shrimps, and crayfish.

Because of the feeding habits of the shellfish, they are likely to contain considerable numbers of bacteria which are characteristic of the water in which they are grown. From time to time polluted waters have given rise to epidemics of typhoid fever following the eating of oysters raised in such waters.

In one epidemic, which occurred in 1934, members of various college fraternities at Wesleyan University had eaten oysters contaminated with typhoid germs. All the oysters were found to have come from one dealer. As a result of these early observations, various states have passed laws which control the pollution of water in which oysters are grown, as well as the manner of shipment. Oysters are shipped into New York City from New York state, Connecticut, Delaware, New Jersey, Virginia, and Massachusetts, as well as from the places already mentioned.

Shippers have to submit certificates to the effect that the oysters and the shellfish beds are free from contamination. They must certify also that every handler of the shellfish is free from infectious disease in communicable form.

The oyster crop of the United States represents two-thirds of the world's supply. About 17,000,000 bushels of oysters are consumed every year. The value of the crop approximates $13,000,000.

About one-fifth of all the oysters produced are canned. The original center of the industry was Baltimore, but now Mississippi and South Carolina also produce many oysters.

Shellfish, like oysters, are 86 per cent water, 6.2 per cent protein, 12 per cent fat and 3.7 per cent carbohydrate, the remainder being ash, which contains the mineral salts. The scallop and the shrimp provide much more protein; namely, 15 and 19 per cent respectively, and much less water and carbohydrate.

Oysters are a rich source of iron and copper, and also contain rather large amounts of zinc. As I have already said, they are exceedingly rich in iodine.

Oysters also provide liberal amounts of vitamin A and are a good source of vitamin B-1 and B-2.

In addition, there is some vitamin C and vitamin D, but the amounts are not significant, particularly when compared with the richness of the liver of the fish in vitamin D.

A Book a Day

By Bruce Catton

Committing a murder seems to be one of the easiest of all tricks. It's getting along with yourself after the murder is committed that takes doing. This great thought comes to me after reading Joanna Cannan's excellent novel, "Frightened Angels" (Harcourt $2).

Mrs. Cannan tells about a little mouse of an English schoolmaster, who is hated by his pupils, bullied by his fellow-teachers, pushed down by poverty and, in general, ground about by the fates until his pent-up resentment boils over and he battles out the brains of his pet enemy with a cricket bat.

The deed done, the little man seems in a fair way to enjoy life for a time. He gets one or two other breaks; his financial problems are lightened, and it seems that he can at last realize his dream of becoming a botanist. Happiness appears to be just around the corner.

But his spirits are uneasy. At first he is haunted by fear that the murder will be traced to him. Then, when that passes, he begins to be afraid that it won't. His fellows still despise him as a weakling, an ineffectual creature who couldn't say boo to a goose; if they could only know—

So, at last, he confesses and no one will believe him. Everybody takes it for granted that he is just suffering from a nervous breakdown; the mere idea of his committing a murder is too absurd to be taken seriously.

And in the end the author—seemingly unable to think of anything better—kills him by having him fall off a cliff, thus putting a rather weak ending on an intelligent and constantly interesting novel.

Your Children

By Olive Roberts Barton

We cannot expect children to ride our hobbies, or to give in altogether to our ideas.

If they did, they would be mere parrots, or carbon copies, or rubber stamps, whatever you want to call it. Moreover, they lose necessary independence as well as ability to think and act for themselves.

However, there are some things that a parent may demand quite safely from a child, without injuring his self-confidence, and one of them is the matter of speech.

When I read how Lowell Thomas got his training in concise speaking and quick, lucid thinking, I was impressed. It appears that his physician father, who hated slovenly habits of speech, tried to teach Lowell as a boy to express his ideas.

Perhaps this has more to do with his hold over audiences than all the high-powered colleges he attended later. In fact, he admits it.

Slang No Longer Funny
The advent of slang into our lingo, or rather into our language that has become lingo, has shoved expressive words over the edge. A little of it is a "bit of all right," as the Cockney says. But slang is not so popular because it brings a laugh—it really doesn't any more—but because it can be rolled off without thinking.

Speaking of confidence, by the way, there is no other booster to pride in the world that can equal that of correctly expressing one's ideas. Gab is really a gift, if it is concise, interesting and spoken straight from the brain without repetition or halts.

So many people trying to get to a point ramble over to China and back when all they want is to get next door, figuratively speaking.

Colleges had a reputation for silence. Perhaps he was too silent to suit most people. Often he did not choose to speak, but when he did it was quoted all over the land.

Worth Parents' Effort
And so, I believe that parents could not spend time to any better advantage than in training the child in the art of clear expression. Also, to increase vocabulary by the addition of one new word a day. It can be done by spelling and defining a word, using it in two sentences and then having the child make up several of his own.

After that this word and others learned before should be included in general table conversation or whenever the family is together.

Children should be encouraged to relate an experience in clear, brief sentences without gesture and without shouting all over the place. As they grow older the factor of entertainment must enter into it. They should hold descriptions and details that will hold listeners.

But the ABC of good-speaking is the slight pause before utterance, in which thoughts are assembled at the front of the mind before firing. Spontaneous speech, the speech of everyday life, will eventually take on the characteristics of the "exercise time." Then it will become natural.

Gorgeous

BY LAURA LOU BROOKMAN
© 1938 NEA Service, Inc.

BEGIN HERE TODAY
TOBY RYAN, 19, is a commercial model, posing for photographs to be used in advertisements. She shares an apartment with HARRIET HOLM, also a model.

At a charity style show Toby meets wealthy TIM JAMIESON who showers her with attentions for a time. The leaves town for "a few days," promising to call Toby as soon as he returns. The time stretches out, and no word comes from him.

Toby spends a day "on location," making photographs to illustrate a magazine story. When she reaches home a letter is waiting for her.

NOV. 5 ON WITH THE STORY
CHAPTER XXII
HARRIET, who was at the mirror coaxing her hair into soft waves, said, "There's a letter for you, Toby. It came in the afternoon mail."

Toby picked up the letter and for one breathless moment her heart soared. Then she saw the name on the corner of the envelope and the warm feeling that had surrounded her vanished. The letter wasn't from Tim. The name on the envelope was that of an advertising agency.

She said, "It's nothing very important, I guess," and tore open the envelope. There were two sheets inside, folded separately. The first bore the letterhead of the advertising agency. It read, briefly, that the enclosed letter had been received from a publication carrying their advertising and, since it seemed to be for Toby, they were forwarding it to her.

The second page was a sheet of pale pink notepaper, written in purple ink. Attached was a picture of Toby, cut from an advertisement. The picture was rather worn and had been folded so that a crease came directly down the center of her face. But it was Toby just the same. And it was folded back the clipping and read:

"Dear Dream Girl: I suppose you will be surprised to get this letter from someone you have never seen or heard of, but since I do not know where you are, writing this letter is the best I can do. I hope it will reach you. Dream Girl, you are the one I have been searching for all my life. I have another picture like the one I am putting in this letter and I keep it in my watch and look at it many times a day."

"I would send you one of my pictures, but I do not have any that do me justice. Dream Girl, I have roved the world, but now I am ready to go down in a little home and know that you are the one to share my lot. Will you please write to me and tell me your name and address? Until then I will just call you Dream Girl and count the days until I hear from you."

Ever-lovingly,
Jonas Huckabeeberry.

Toby read it slowly, for some of the words were almost illegible. Then she said, "Why, Harriet—how ridiculous!"

"What's the matter, honey?" "This letter. It's perfectly crazy. Listen to this—"

She read the letter again, this time aloud. Harriet crossed the room and took it from her when she had finished. "It's a proposal," Harriet exclaimed. "Jonas Huckabeeberry wants you to marry him, Toby. He's asking you to share his lot—and I'll bet it's a fine one! I've had some fan mail myself, but never anything to equal this. Well, darling, there's a husband if you want him."

Blane's words still rang in Toby's ears. "A girl whose pictures haven't been used too much... one with freshness and charm... who can hold a bar of soap in her hand and make you think that because she likes it, you'll like it too... It's going to be a nice job for the girl who lands it—"

On Blane's desk was a box of cough drops and a manuscript reviewing the history of the company manufacturing them. He was supposed to be reading that history. But Bill disregarded it, as well as the cough drops. He opened a drawer of his desk and took out several clippings. They were advertisements, cut from newspapers and magazines. In each there was a picture of a girl—the same girl.

Bill laid the clippings out before him, rearranged them. He sat back and studied them and presently withdrew one. Then another. At last only one remained. It was the photograph of a girl with an armful of daisies. She was looking up, smiling, and the wind had blown her hair back from her face. It was easy to imagine this girl halted by the gloriousness of a summer morning, drinking in the beauty of trees and sky and yellow sunshine. It was Toby Ryan.

FOR several minutes Bill studied the picture. Then he arose and went to Howard Blane's private office. The door of the room was open and Bill stood there a moment before he entered.

Weakened Pitching May Place Senators in Second Division

Dozen of Washington Players Nursing Injuries, Making Team Most Uncertain Outfit in Either League

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is another in the series on big league training camps.

By HARRY GRAYSON
Sports Editor, NEA Service

ORLANDO, Fla.—Stanley Raymond Harris is rehearsing a ghost-like Washington club here in the land of the giant grapefruit.

The Senators are the most uncertain array in the majors. They are made so by broken bones and peculiar ailments. They must obtain a capable catcher, Comeback aspirants must swing into their old strides.

Given a first-rate backstop and a break in luck—its about time they had a break other than the hospital variety—the Nats might top the second division. Right now, however, there are too many contingencies for them to be sure of anything more than backing the Philadelphia Athletics into the cellar.

The parade at Tinker Field easily might be taken for one of wounded war vets. Here's the hospital list:

Pitcher Buck Newsom still is nursing a broken kneecap suffered last year.

Pitcher Ed Linke carries a chemical pad that generates heat in his hip pocket to warm the fingers of his throwing hand—there is no pulse in the right arm that went dead on him in 1934.

First Baseman Joe Kuhel's ankle, broken in 1934, still is a bit weak.

Outfielder Johnny Stone's broken leg, suffered the same year, seems to be o.k., but you never can tell.

Outfielder Jake Powell's sciatic nerve that flared him last season hasn't made its appearance this spring, but it might.

Quick! The Ambulance!

Jack Redmond, most promising catcher with the Griffins a year ago, is lost to the outfit because of the lack of blood circulation in the fingers of his throwing hand.

Pitcher Monte Weaver needs some weight that he worried away over an ailment many believe imaginary.

Outfielder Carl Reynolds' sinus trouble, which caused him to slump at the plate every summer, has been licked, he says—but then sinus trouble is a tough nut to keep on the floor.

Pitcher Jack Russell's fractured knuckle has healed, but it remains to be seen whether it will affect his mound work.

Fitchers Frank Petlicolas and Henry Coppola, both right-angled prospects, had sessions in the infirmary last year—the former for a flock of 17 boils and an appendectomy, and the latter for teeth and tonsil extraction.

So much for the sick list, now let's look over the one side here, now let's look over the one side there.

The latter, a tall, 20-year-old North Carolina youngster, is the sensation in camp. He hit .305 for Chattanooga in his first complete season as a professional, and banked out a home run inside spacious Tinker Field in his first exhibition game against the gilded Red Sox.

Myer, the 1935 league batting champion, never looked better.

All the regular infielders swat the ball left-handed, but the reservists, Ossie Bluege, Ralph Kress, and Roberto Estalella, the little Cuban who compiled an average of .320 for Harrisburg, bat from the right side of the rubber.

Pitching Not So Bad
The Senators have three right-handed hitting outfielders—Jesse Hill, Jake Powell, and Carl Reynolds. Johnny Stone and Wilson (Dee) Miles, who batted .334 for Chattanooga and led the Southern Association in runs batted in, hit from the other side.

Harris looks for considerable pitching from Newsom, Earl Whitehill, Ed Linke, Jimmy Deshong, Jack Russell, Pete Appleton, and Monte Weaver.

Deshong and Outfielder Jesse Hill came from the Yanks in exchange for Pitcher Bump Hadley and Outfielder Roy Johnson.

Appleton, who last season changed his name from Jabonowski and his luck to that of the leading International League flinger with Montreal, was drafted for his eighth major league trial.

Other mound candidates are Petlicolas, Coppola, Dick Lananah, Joe Bokina, and Joe Krakauskas. Lananah is a southpaw who won 7 and lost 11 with Chattanooga in his first year out.

Cralk Griffith and Harris have decided that neither Cliff Bolton nor Jim Holbrook will be hitting the bat. Neither can hit, and Bill Starr, up from Harrisburg, can't hit or throw.

The Nats still are hoping to land Arndt Jorgens of the Yanks, and have been dickering for the veteran Roy Spencer, 36 years old, former Senators' backstop, who caught for Baltimore last season.

Either of these two backstops can make the team. Jorgens is a peppery receiver, and Spencer is adept at handling pitchers.

The Nationals have possibilities provided they can land a catcher of worth and shake the hard luck that has trailed them like a faithful hound since young Joe Cronin lashed Goose Goslin and that crowd down in front in 1933.

No two total eclipses ever can happen nearer each other than 177 days.

The Loveliest Time of the Year

The loveliest time of the year is coming. The birds will be singing, the brown bees humming. The vines will be green on this house of mine. The red rose will nod to the columbines. The loveliest time of the year is waking. The winter was long and the cold heart-breaking. But daisies will grow in the field. Will close the blackest meadows over. The loveliest time of the year is dawning. When hearts deep in night find their own glad morning. When hearts deep in night find their own glad morning. When quickening comes to the lowliest clod. And the tiniest tendril climbs to God. —Selected.

To those who love to watch the changing seasons, the dawning of springtime in the fields and woods, and even along the streets, is ever new. Each returning year we welcome signs of earth's awakening—the bursting leaf buds, joyous bird songs, the delicate unfolding of the first wild flowers and the ever-recurring miracle of spring brings to mind the words of the psalmist: "Thou renewest the face of the earth," and while it isn't possible for us all to view the annual aben parade, or make the pilgrimage to Natchez and the beautiful old gardens of the South, the Magnolia and Middleton gardens of Charleston, S. C., that have become centers of national interest, we may come in our own garden and watch an annual parade of beautiful and brilliant bloom. Some luxuries are beyond our grasp and it is better, perhaps, that they should be. But the luxury of owning a garden is beyond the grasp of no one, and from these gardens we learn many things.

We are so glad to know that the elm trees have been planted on the highway and now it is up to every home in the city to get busy, especially those living along the Broadway. We earn the title, "The Prettiest town with the best kept yards along the route." "It can be done."

My most interesting reading of the week was Admiral Byrd's new book

Astaire, Rogers in 'Follow the Fleet'

Irving Berlin Songs Feature New Film at the Saenger

Ginger Rogers fans are handed a treat in RKO Radio's musical, "Follow the Fleet," in which the vivacious titian-haired star dances four times and sings two of Irving Berlin's haunting melodies.

Three of Ginger's dance numbers are done with her bewitching partner, Fred Astaire. They perform a sizzling hot collegiate ballroom routine to the tune "Let Yourself Go."

Later, they do a screamingly humorous eccentric pantomime dance to "All My Eggs in One Basket," and they also join in a vocal rendition of this number.

For the finale, Miss Rogers and Astaire perform a different interpretative dance to "Let's Face the Music and Dance."

Dressed in rehearsal shorts, Ginger establishes the fact that she has no peer as a tap dancer as she goes through her solo routine to the strains of "Let Yourself Go."

Ginger's opening song number, "Let Yourself Go," is sung in a San Francisco dance hall and in the second chorus she is backed by a girl trio.

Miss Rogers and Astaire are supported by a "top-hole" cast including Harriet Hillard and Randolph Scott, and Astrid Allwyn.

routes to China all pass down through it from Siberia. For trade development, and for keeping in touch with Soviet China, these routes are important.

Armed Forces Are Massed

Along this Mongolia-Manchukuo border, which Russia contends is quite definite and which Japan wishes to have arbitrated, each side is concentrating armed forces.

Since 1921, the Mongolian People's Republic has depended on Russian munition works for armament. Russian drill masters for its army. In recent clashes, great bombers blazing the hammer and sickle strafed the Manchukuoan lines.

Into Manchukuo, on the other hand, Japan is pouring more troops, and moving up its planes, tanks, and guns from the advance base established at Tsitsihar in 1931. Manchukuoan troops are 95 per cent Chinese, but Japanese regulars were recently sent from Tokyo to back them up.

Marshal Vassily Blucher, Soviet commander in the east, and General Minami, Japanese commander in Manchukuo, have taken steps to get their forces in order for possible general conflict.

Foreigners often find, after a day's shopping, that they have accumulated money which even beggars scorn.

Arkansas Loses In

den Friday night. It was a case of a fine team of youngsters against a crew of veterans with several seasons' experience to behind. At that, you'll never make the Arkansas supporters who saw the game believe that the better team won.

The basket ball experts gathered here from all sections of the United States had never counted Arkansas, or any of the college quintets, as a serious rival for either the Universals or the Globe Refiners of McPherson, Kan., A. A. U. champions.

But eyes began to stick out when, after Frank Lubin, gigantic center of the Universals dropped in a free throw, the Razorbacks ran their total to eight before the Californians scored again. It happened like this:

Jack Robbins tossed a pretty field goal. Ike Poole and then Don Lockard did likewise. After which Poole scored another. Then Lubin got one of the only two field goals that he managed to make. But Arkansas wasn't discouraged about that. Robbins and Gilliland made a field goal apiece, and the score was 12 to 3.

Swanson, Universals guard, made the most of a free throw, but Robbins came through with two of the same, and Howell added another. Thus it was 15-4 Arkansas's advantage.

Before the Razorbacks tallied again, the Universals went to 13—Bobbie Martin put Arkansas to 16 with a free throw. Dennis Hays pushed Arkansas to 18 with a free throw, but two field goals by Piper and one by Lubin put the Universals in front, 20-18, at the half.

Battle Expected Over Air Safety

Senate's Decision to Investigate, May Shake Up U. S. Bureau

By HERBERT PLUMMER
Associated Press Correspondent

WASHINGTON—The senate's decision to explore the question of aviation safety through its commerce committee may result in disclosures which will have far-reaching effects.

There have been hints of a shakeup in personnel and organization of the bureau of air commerce before it is over. Officials of the bureau, at least, are prepared for anything.

Ever since Senator Bronson Cutting of New Mexico plunged to his death in a transport plane near Kirkville, Mo., last year, air safety has been a question of major concern to senators.

Cutting was a great favorite among his colleagues. His death focused attention on the bureau of air commerce and its efforts to enforce safety regulations.

That crash prompted the present investigation. A committee of five senators headed by Copeland of New York and including Johnson of California, a close personal friend of Cutting, has been given $10,000 to do the job.

It has been an open secret in Washington for a long time that there is dissension in the bureau of air commerce and that sooner or later it would be forced into the open.

There were at least five candidates for the post of director of the bureau when Eugene Vidal was appointed. Vidal's selection left several rivals not only disappointed but outright resentful.

Senators already have been told by

They are also prepared to present to the committee as witnesses for the bureau such noted fliers as Jimmy Doolittle and Amelia Earhart.

STORIES IN STAMPS

UNCONDITIONAL SURRENDER GRANT

HE was christened Ulysses Simpson Grant, but he became more popularly known after the Civil War as "Unconditional Surrender" Grant, a title he earned when, in his campaign on the Tennessee River in 1862, he demanded the complete surrender of General Bragg at Fort Donelson.

But more memorable was Grant's gracious gesture at Appomattox Courthouse, Va., when he sat opposite the defeated Gen. Robert E. Lee, saw his bejeweled sword, and added the note to the terms of surrender that all sidearms might be retained.

Grant tried to retain his trust in others, when he became president in 1868, and fell victim to the intrigues of his political friends. As a result, his administration was marked by one of the most flagrant financial scandals and panics in United States history. He fell heavily in debt after his retirement, and received full pension as general until his death at the age of 63.

The United States issued four stamps portraying Grant. The issue of 1902-3 carries dates of his birth (1822) and death (1885).
